I think the solution may end up being converting all of these files to pdf and producing them to her that way. How long would that take?

Oh – and these are also load files. The same idea, an index. Also readable through notepad.

I've also attached both. [REDACTED] also noticed that there were some PDFs on defense's list. But all those that we've tried to open thus far work perfectly fine.

Thanks. Can you point me to an example of a load file and an example of an eml file with attachments along the lines you're describing?

A load file is essentially just an index file. It does not contain any substantive material. An eml file is just an email file. I typically convert them to pdf; however, there were a few which contained attachments that I could not pull out. I left those as eml files because otherwise the email attachment would not be included. I can try my hand at the eml files again to see if I can find a way to make them work as pdfs.

Thanks very much. Just so I have a clear understanding, what exactly is a load and eml file?

I suspect there is some issue with the computer Maxwell is using at MDC, so I'm hoping they can get someone at MDC to take a look at the computer once we identify the category of files that won't open.

Hey,

I just took a look through the documents listed for the first production. They appear to be all excel files but also include a couple load and eml files. Do MDC computers really not have the capability to view excel files?
