Subject: last try from Vanity Fair...

Dear mrs. [REDACTED]:

Good morning, how are you? This is David Lopez, the journalist from Vanity Fair magazine who wrote you a few weeks ago. One of your colleagues answered me then, telling me that you cannot help me with the story I'm preparing about the Epstein case. First of all, I want to apologize for being so insistent, but I hope you can understand it just because of my interest in going further and doing a proper work.

Of course you know well the case, and the people who knows you and have worked with you because of this case says you were not happy with the Epstein agreement and that you wanted to go further, but you also have appeared in the news because of your message to one of mr. Epstein lawyer to minimize the impact of the case in the press.

I'm reaching you again to ask you again for your kind help, wondering if you could kindly help me to go further, and, of course, if you want, doing it absolutely off the record. I'm a independent journalist. I don't have other interest in this than in doing a proper and accurate work and, as I said before, I'm happy to send you as much information from you as you could need to show you who I am.

I would really like to understand why mr. Eppstein got that agreement, if there were already other high relevant people, as the duke of York, whose names appear in the cause.

I appreciate your attention. And please excuse my insistence.

warm regards

David Lopez
