This is the last amended briefing schedule I have, D.E. 356. On February 10, 2016, petitioners filed their motion for summary judgment (D.E. 361). Under the scheduling order, the government had 43 days (March 24, 2016) to file its response to the motion for summary judgment, as well as the government's cross-motion for summary judgment.

Petitioners were allowed 19 days (April 12, 2016) to file their reply to the government's response to petitioners' motion for summary judgment, and their response to the government's cross motion for summary judgment.

The government was allowed 14 days (April 26, 2016), to file their reply to petitioners' response to the government's motion for summary judgment.

Also, we need to establish a new due date for the government's responses to the supplemental discovery requests propounded on December 2, 2015, and December 29, 2015. Some of these may no longer be applicable since the government decided not to assert the Wellcare argument. I am fairly certain Cassell insisted some of the requests for production and for admissions were still relevant.
