Dear Ms Pearce,

I refer to your complaint dated 23 March 2016.

* You complain about various interactions you have had with police, which you believe indicate police are targeting you and your sons. In particular you raise two instances where police took action against you in relation to driving with the prescribed concentration of alcohol in your blood. You also complain about your arrest on two occasions: 13 August 2015 and 5 February 2016, taking issue with the charges laid against you and the police account of events.

* I advise that from the information you provide, it appears the police officers involved in the incidents have engaged in routine police procedures in relation to their contact with you. This includes conducting random breath tests, responding to reports from the public, making an arrest based on a reasonable suspicion of an offence, compliance with custody procedures in relation to searches and use of cells. In my view there is no evidence of police misconduct in relation to the concerns you raise.

In relation to your complaint that the charges against you have no merit and your request to be supplied with evidence, these are issues that need to be addressed through the court process. In other words, if you dispute the charges, you will need to do so in court. This office does not become involved in matters which are before the court.

I have therefore made a determination pursuant to section 21(1)(d) of the Police (Complaints and Disciplinary Proceedings) Act 1985, not to refer your complaint for investigation, as in my view it would be unlikely to reveal evidence of misconduct on the part of a police officer and therefore such investigation is unjustifiable.

Yours faithfully
