CT Corporation Smart Chart: State-by-State Voluntary Assumed Name Filings for Entities

For a number of reasons, an entity may decide to conduct its business operations under an assumed name, different from the one on its entity's formation filings. If a business decides to do this, it is likely a filing will need to be made with state authorities, to inform them and the public about the alternative name choice. However, unlike many aspects of entity law, this is an area where the states have tended to go in separate ways—laws vary widely and by entity type. Furthermore, these filings may or may not need to be regularly renewed, depending on the specific jurisdiction. If you are considering using an assumed name for your entity, this chart spells out which entities should file in which states, as well as the frequency of the filings.
