I asked Andrew if perhaps he had heard from Jeffrey on this and he has not...Andrew says this dinner is tonight and 7:30 is timing...maybe when Je comes back you can mention it to him...(If he is still feeling poorly, Ill bet he has had enough for one day)

So here's the beef:

We're having dinner at the fine dining restaurant at yacht haven. I would LOVE it if you could join. This is the last day of the trip and so the day is full of family activities. There is no place to land the chopper that I have been able to identify (the place you landed for the grand opening now has structures on it). Depending on how accurate your pilot is, (and what the occupancy of the [REDACTED] is) you might be able to put down at the of a finger pier. Worst case, of course, there is an airport and we have escalades that routinely pick up yacht owners there. What do you think?
