Dear [REDACTED],

Please find attached a few writing samples for Jeffrey. I've selected a real variety of clips that I hope will provide him with a sense of my writing style and my ability to translate complex ideas into a compelling read. I'll send a few e-mails with a few attachments each.

I think it's worth mentioning that as a journalist, I write frequently. But a large part of my career has also been spent editing, which includes searching for the most compelling ideas in science and medicine, and helping other writers -- and scientists -- tell these stories in a logical, clear and engaging way. I've also overseen the design and redesign of a number of website to showcase the work of magazines and not-for-profit organizations alike. I'd be happy to expand on any of these experiences and to provide editing samples, should they be of interest.

They clips include the following:

- 1) Review of The Snoring Bird by biologist Bernd Heinrich for the Globe and Mail newspaper in Canada.
- 2) An article about the world's first climate change research module for On Earth magazine.
- 3) A Q&A with author Emma Marris about her book Rambunctious Garden, also for On Earth magazine.
- 4) A selection of recent blog posts and Q&As for PopTech, a east coast version of the TED conference.
- 5) An article on so-called "silent mutations" that I did for Seed.

Best,

Lindsay

Hi [REDACTED],

Please pass on my regards to Jeffrey. His project sounds exciting and I would welcome the opportunity to become involved. Opportunities to communicate provocative scientific ideas are much too rare.

I'll be in touch later today with the clips he requested.

Best,

Lindsay
