Hi Jeff,

For years, even before Barri and I bumped into you in Central Park a number of years ago, Barri would always say what a special person you were and how you and I should meet because we have many common business as well as outside interests.

First let me say you are a far more successful financier than I.

That being said I have been involved in a few endeavors that have been rewarding.

On the entrepreneurial side I brought the first personal computers into this country from both Japan and Korea pre Michael Dell.

In the public policy arena I served as a trustee of the Hudson Institute and was very close to Herman Kahn it's founder before his untimely passing.

I was also very active in Republican Politics at one point.

I have written two books.

One is, How To Think Like An Entrepreneur, and the other is, There Is Enough Information In The World To Solve Any Problem, which is based on what I learned primarily from Herman Kahn.

I have been interested in Stem Cells for years and had a site built Stemmd.com which I have never really activated.

Currently I have started what you might say is a private/entrepreneurial equity company that has probably 20 projects under way in one form or another from EB-5's to Reality TV with a soft porn star/former girl friend of a rapper which I think is going to turn into a huge success.

All that being said----and these are things I wanted to discuss with you as my background is marketing and not finance---Barri and I, since her call to you realized you may be able to help us with a serious problem we have with our daughter--non medical--non financial.

That's the "reality background."

Barri said you get back to NYC tomorrow.

I hope and would appreciate you finding a half hour at your earliest convenience.

Thank You.

Best,

Michael Shane
