I wonder how it worked...

OK...thanks

Yeah, I should note that the Gmail feature works by delaying the sending of all your messages by a couple of minutes to give you time to "regret & recall".

ok. thanks! all good info...

I like the way things work now...but this morning I sent an email I should not have and realized it seconds after hitting send!

The undo is a gmail.app feature, that's why you don't see it in iPhone's mail.app

The gmail app is essentially the same as using web gmail - looks a lot like their google drive app. Some people love it... (I prefer having all my google & non-google email accounts in the same place).

It doesn't break anything in the iPhone mail app so I'd suggest installing it and see how you like it. If you prefer it, you can turn off gmail from iPhone mail.

Hi James...should I be using the Gmail app on my cell instead of what i am using? Jeffrey just showed me how I can send an email then "undo" it even after sending...I don't have that ability on my cell now..he said perhaps it is the gmail app I need? would it change anything else I have?
