ahhhhh!! thank you Larry! I read your email to Ike...as I said it made sense to us but we still didn't like it! A little girl (I'd bet 5 years old) sitting behind us and on her first flight ever screamed so cute like she was on a ride at Disney World and was really enjoying it! lightened the mood for sure...she wanted to do it again...HA! not me or many of the other passengers...but it was darn cute!
Thanks on the article...we will read

Yes, quite normal experience, however it doesn't happen too often since wake turbulence is generated by another airplane's wing kind of like a car when you pass by a semi truck the air is turbulent same thing happens with an airplane wing.

I'll send you another email, that just happened an Airbus 380 has tremendous wake turbulence since it's so heavy. Crossed paths with a smaller corporate jet, I'll send you the email, it's good reading share it with Ike yes he does! thanks for this info...

So I have another question for you! Since you are my favorite, trusted pilot and after all... We flew to Orlando and as we were on our descent we experienced going through another plane's wake!?! I have never been on a plane that dipped way left and then way right again...everyone was a bit disturbed by it including me and Ike! The flight attendant (who was standing in the aisle) explained what we went through...I must say it was a slow dip to left and then right...her explanation made sense to us and I was thankful for it... but...can you elaborate?! All normal stuff?

Hi, Happy 4th!

Yes, I'm only guessing. But JE said he would pick the paint color on July 21st, when he gets back to NY,, I'm thinking he may go to LSJ from Paris,, he asked for flight times to the island from Paris,, but he does that all the time,,, I'll keep you posted if JE tells me anything,, of course Dave and Bill are in Paris with JE,, but JE keeps sometimes keep me in the loop anyhow,,

Take care
