

Graydon,

Sorry I am faxing you these thoughts as I will be unavailable this morning:

Dominick Dunne should have been sued by “Strunk and White”, not Condit. [i.e.: “he flew to Paris after her death in the car crash with Dodi Fayed”]
P.S. I had forgotten Dunne was also at the Serpentine Gallery with us that night.

- 1) If when reading the article I’m going to say “ouch” I wish it could be from the razor-like edge of a gleaming epee, not a swipe of a dirty butter knife
- 2) More Vanity Fair, less Tattler (tired 20 year old worn stories made to look new)
- 3) Reminder: In the New Yorker, no sexual innuendos; no Steven Bing Las Vegas threesomes and titty bars...
- 4) If there are still allegations in the story regarding Ghislaine, would you agree to publish her response in full as part of the story?
- 5) If the photos I provided raise the level of glamour and elegance that you desire, use them. (send paperwork to NY office if necessary. I trust your judgement.)
- 6) I have spent an obscene amount of money meticulously documenting Vicky’s negligence. After listening to Vicky’s oft repeated: “I am only a journalist hired to work on a story for my editor and am obligated to publish anything I hear, and Jeffrey, you should just go on the record and deny them”, my attorney, the preeminent defender of press freedom responded: “her conduct is deplorable; the archetype of reckless journalism, she should be punished.”

Note: Becker’s photographs of Levy are brilliant. You were right; they are like Oriental paintings.

- Reminder for facts: a) the State Trooper who lived at the house the same time as [REDACTED] [REDACTED]
