President Bill Clinton and Naomi Campbell are among the rich and famous who have flown aboard convicted sex offender Jeffrey Epstein's private jet, according to flight logs from Epstein's private aircraft.

The flight logs from 2003-05 have been filed in one of the many civil lawsuits pending against the billionaire money manager. Nearly two dozen young women have filed lawsuits against Epstein — some already settled — all alleging Epstein sexually abused them as minors at his [REDACTED] home.

Epstein, 57, was released from jail in July after serving 13 months of an 18-month state sentence for soliciting a minor for prostitution and soliciting prostitution.

Attorney Brad Edwards, who represents Jane Doe and two other Epstein victims, filed the flight logs to back up his case that Epstein traveled across state lines for the purpose of sexually abusing Jane Doe and other victims.

"Epstein engaged in the act of trafficking minors across state or country borders for the purposes of sex or prostitution between 2000 and the present. ... Epstein used the fact that he had transported other minors across state and country borders for sexual purposes to help persuade Jane Doe to be sexually abused by him. Epstein also asked Jane Doe to bring other girls to him. Epstein committed the same sorts of acts against other minor girls," Edwards wrote in his pleading.

There are no allegations that anyone who traveled on Epstein's airplanes had anything to do with the sexual abuse, other than Epstein employee [REDACTED], according to many of the teens, court documents and police reports.

The flight logs are for his Boeing 727 and Gulfstream jets.

Epstein, who has donated more than $100,000 over the years to candidates from the Democratic Party, has also hosted several high-profile Democrats aboard his aircraft.

Clinton flew with Epstein from Nov. 4-9, 2003, to destinations that included Oslo, Norway; Russia, Hong Kong, Shanghai and Beijing. On April 2, 2003, Campbell flew from the U.S. Virgin Islands to Brazil.

Failed Palm Beach mayoral candidate Gerry Goldsmith also was a guest on Epstein's plane, traveling from Palm Beach International Airport to New Jersey's Teterboro Airport on Oct. 19, 2003. Former Harvard president and current director of the White House's National Economic Council Larry Summers flew more than once on Epstein's aircraft.

Also flying with Epstein during those years: Sandy Berger, who was the country's national security adviser under Clinton; former Colombian President Andres Pastrana; and high-profile attorney Alan Dershowitz, who is part of Epstein's defense team.
