She had ovarian cancer about 12 years ago and has been battling with it ever since (on and off). Recently it spread to her brain and spine. She has done chemo and radiation several times and now the doctors are mostly focusing on pain management. In other words, I don't think they have a strategy to stop the continued growth. If you know anyone that can advise her or point her in the right direction would greatly appreciate it. I'm trying to get her to do some kind of alternative therapy. She has nothing to lose at this point.
