Our 10MM JPY position is a forward extra with the short call knocking in only if we hit 81.50. The big rally in the JPY has been driven by falling US yields. Now that we have reduced all of our 30yr rates exposure we should sit tight. The BoJ has been making some noise recently regarding intervention and I don't think we should cut the exposure right now.

Left you a message.

We should unwind the remainder of our 30yr swap exposure. Between the jobless claims and housing data the risk has substantially grown for a hard landing which would drive interest rates lower.

We have 10MM of an outright swap and 10MM of a receiver swaption (4.35% strike)

Let me know.

Paul
