Not fixed would be correct, better to say, not operating correctly, one pump is only needed to transfer Aux tank fuel, before FAA mandated Circuit protection we operated two pumps in Aux tanks to Transfer,

Monday I'm having Neil from Banyan work with Larry Morrison to check wiring, Morrison and Peter Swift from Quite Wing think its possible there is an internal leak inside tank and plumbing that causes one pump to Cavitate when both pumps are selected on / only in flight. It doesn't make sense why system is operating normal on ground, and in flight we get at least one pump Low PSI light on. The only difference with ground operation is fuel demand from Engines at high power. Or sensitivity of UFI protection circuit box again.

The tanks have to be removed July of this year for lower fuselage inspection. in order to check internal plumbing, tanks have to be removed according to Morrison also.

Great schedule, thx.,
Bill Hammond departs for Singapore Today, he'll return mid February.

Currently I'm Having morning Coffee poolside at "Casa Echo Victor" / Casa EV. A house this large deserves a name!

B727 training:

Dave, Chris Higgins and myself will attend B727 recurrent training in Miami, due to FAR125, we have to attend every 6months. I'll schedule January 11th and 12th at PanAm in Miami. I feel more comfortable with AUX tanks, since any one pump works in AUX system. This gives me good redundancy.

Is Jan 11th and 12th for B727 class ok for Dave, Chris and I?

Thx,
Larry
