To the person in my life that has always been there (also known as the 100%),

Sorry that this letter is delayed, I've been brainstorming what to write because there's so much to say. Thank you for always being there for me – regardless of what decisions I make, what I say, or what I do – you are the most supportive, wise, and kind-hearted godfather I could ever imagine. You have taught me so much about myself, about the world, and about science and math, I'm confident that the place I'm in today, academically, has been greatly shaped by everything that you've taught me. We have made some incredible memories over the last twenty years – most of which have been documented in the many photographs around your houses. One of my most fond memories is from Palm Beach when I was nine years old and you taught me how to drive a convertible and made me feel comfortable driving it by telling me that it was okay if I crashed, you could just get a new car! From shopping together (and you embarrassing me in front of the store clerks), to eating ice cream and chicken fingers together, to you imparting wisdom on me and Jake in Palm Beach, to going to Disney World together with the girls, to playing with the big Barney costume in your NYC gym everything we do is exceedingly fun. I'm ineffably thankful to have you in my life and can't wait for the next twenty (and more!) years of learning, fun, and 100% support. Thanks for everything – I really mean that from the bottom of my heart, and I feel like I don't tell you enough how thankful I am for everything you do for me.

Love always and forever, 100% of the time,

[REDACTED]
