Rokstone on the expert panel in Telegraph article on the Election
General Election 2015: Who will mend Britain's broken housing market?When it comes to policies that will clinch a modern general election, property is usually more of a vocal backbencher than a leading MP. This hasn't always been the case.Housing policy was one of the hot topics in the first election after the Second World War, when Clement Attlee beat Winston Churchill to Number 10, launching a tide of social reform. The Labour leader's promise to rebuild bombed-out Britain with streets of council housing helped him win the vote over Britain's wartime hero.Seventy years lat
