The Top 10 Online Myths overcome by the ISIS Program

by Matthew Crosston

The ISIS program online at Bellevue University is the BEST Intelligence Studies program in the world, period, because it applies the above principles and EMBRACES fully the challenge of not acquiescing to unfounded bias, historical prejudice, and pedagogical laziness. To all those interested, all over the world, coming to the ISIS program, joining our ISIS community, does not mean you come to Omaha. It simply means you embraced what 21st century education is MEANT to be. WELCOME to the NEW AGE!!!!

The Politics of Micro-Decisions - Edward Snowden, Net Neutrality, and the Architectures of the Internet

by Florian Sprenger

Be it in the case of opening a website, sending an email, or high-frequency trading, bits and bytes of information have to cross numerous nodes at which micro-decisions are made. These decisions concern the most efficient path through the network, the processing speed, or the priority of incoming data packets. Despite their multifaceted nature, micro-decisions are a dimension of control and surveillance in the twenty-first century that has received little critical attention. They represent the smallest unit and the technical precondition of a contemporary network politics – and of our...

East meets West in the pedagogy of the mindfulness-based interventions

by Donald McCown

Draft. Final published in Ie, A., C. Ngnoumen, and E. Langer (Eds.). (2014). Wiley-Blackwell handbook of mindfulness. Oxford: Wiley-Blackwell. There are a number of differing definitions of mindfulness current today, which are privileged within particular discourses, such as the "Eastern" definition within the discourse of Buddhism, the "Western" definition within the discourse of academic social psychology exemplified by the work of Ellen Langer, the secular (but essentially

"Eastern") definition within the discourse of research on the MBIs, and a definition within a broader discourse...

The relationships between dysfunctional attitudes, rumination, and non-somatic depressive symptomatology in newly diagnosed Asian cancer patients

by Haikel Lim

Background: Given the high prevalence of cancer patients with comorbid depression, the present study sought to elucidate the relationships between two vulnerability factors, dysfunctional attitudes and rumination, and their influence on non-somatic depressive symptomatology in an Asian cohort of cancer patients. It was hypothesised that all variables of interest would be inter-correlated, and that both dysfunctional attitudes and rumination would mediate one another in influencing non-somatic depressive symptoms. Methods: 194 recently diagnosed mixed-cancer patients in Singapore (Mage =...
