oops didn't see this before - sorry for delay in response: have had a hectic week trying to find a place to live, so wasn't checking in real time.

so i got a name / intro from a friend last week for an SEO guy. i was going to reach out to him but i wanted to talk to you first about how to frame the project...(we just didn't get a chance to discuss when i saw you last.)

can we have phone convo about how i should proceed with him? or would you like to contact him directly?

again... this is a referral...i can dig deeper into more people and i think having a game plan would be a good idea. (I am in the middle of flushing out a bunch of other thoughts to you regarding the interviews which I will send you later today which may help on this google front).

also, i have a feeling that in this case, Mike (i think that was his name) was a pretty good person to lead the tech side (Al made him out to seem like a pretty big player and that the reason things went south was b/c of a kind of perfect storm of a computer/payment problem that coincided with a Google sweep). But of course, you spoke to the guy and have much longer history with (and more info about) all these cats. What was your instinct about Mike (if you can separate that from your current Al outlook). And, if you think Mike was good, is that relationship still in tact at all or is it easier to just start tabula rasa?

finally: what is happening w the conference on the island? is that something that you think i really should be at and if so what are the dates or who should i contact about it? (another friend of mine from LA is coming to NYC in early january (jan 7-11) to build a machine that he would like me to collaborate on and i want to make sure there are no conflicts before i commit to him.
