 The New York Times | A Special Invitation for Times Subscribers

A subscriber-only call with national editor Marc Lacey and reporters in the field

Your direct line to reporters at the front lines of the racial divide

The racial divide in the U.S. is as deep as it is disturbing. That fact is underlined by the reporting that Race/Related, our newsletter and multimedia reporting project exploring race in America, has undertaken for more than a year. In response to readers' questions about the events in Charlottesville and its aftermath, we're inviting you to participate in an Insider-only conference call between John Eligon, national correspondent covering race, and Sheryl Gay Stolberg, domestic affairs correspondent. The conversation, moderated by the national editor Marc Lacey, will mine the frontline experiences of Times journalists around the country.

How do Times journalists work across desks to write about, and explore, the cause of the color divide? How are White House policies helping or hurting race relations, and how will they continue to play out on the national stage? Is white nationalism really increasing its reach, and if so, with whom? Bring your questions, and prepare to move beyond the rhetoric in this exclusive Times Insider event.

Tuesday, August 29

2:30–3:15 [REDACTED]. E.T.

We will email call-in numbers to you 24 hours in advance of the call.
