 The New York Times | A Special Invitation for Times Subscribers

Join New York Times journalists and tech security experts for our first-ever CryptoParty.

Learn how to hack-proof your digital data.

Raise a drink to locked-down data at our first-ever CryptoParty, where you'll learn the basics of cybersecurity and how to protect your data against online vulnerability in the age of WikiLeaks. Curated by New York Times director of information technology Runa Sandvik — a hacker-turned-security expert whose former associates include a pre-exiled Edward Snowden — the evening features reporters Ellen Gabler and Richard

Harris, who'll discuss The Times's anonymous email tip line which led to their recent story on opioids on Reddit as well as those who'll speak to the way journalists navigate the murky legality of leaks and questionable leads. What's the deal with two-factor authentication? How strong is the strongest password? And how safe are our digital secrets in the face of the new cyber sophistication? Learn from the experts while mingling with code jockeys and fellow Times readers alike at this special Times Insider event.
