steve is insisting on speaking. that means no one knows what will be said until the morning of june 20. he will almost certainly make news inadvertently. he will craft some new message about how to segment the market. my bet is he doubles down on what intel is doing which is technically problematic. his whole issue is that he thinks pcs are expensive relative to tablets and wants a $199 tablet which can only be done on ARM if it competes. he doesn't get it--literally dozens have tried to explain.

there's a small chance he does nothing and says little, but then that will be news.

I bet he pushes to preannounce hardware (new surface) he is so desperate.

he also has his reorg that will happen during all this. that is what the WSJ knows about. People are distraught over this and he also doesn't know what he is doing. It is so bad that people are turning down jobs that look like promotions because they are not real jobs. It is crazy town for sure.

me...my head is in san Francisco. had a fascinating dinner with president of warner brothers over the tech being used in movies and who funds it.

Apple owns June 10-14 with their conference so no industry news will break through. But competing with that is the computer game conference.

Next week is a big computer show in Taiwan that is broadly covered (CNN, USA Today)

June 20 is a big Samsung event.

Then June 26 is the Microsoft event on Windows 8.1.
