Not yet, it starts on June 29th until September 26th.

If you interested in details:

When I had my technical admission interview in January, they told me that the earliest spot was June 29th, which I thought was odd. I think it might something to do with my inability officially to work in US. 97% of their students get hired as programmers and the school gets placement fees. And according their rules, they require full tuition payment within 4 weeks of the acceptance.

But I'm not waisting my time:

Since enrollment, I have been studying everyday on my own. I enrolled in several online platform which teach coding. Links bellow shows what courses, projects, challenges I've finished:

I'm getting ready for hackreactor pre-course work assignment which they release on April 27th. I think by the beginning of the school I will have solid (mostly theoretical) understanding of intermediate/advanced javascript and in the school I will learn more practical skills.

To keep my endurance, I have been exercising regularly: running 5miles twice week, yoga, 1mile open water swim in SF bay and I'm planning to do 50-72 miles bike rides sometime soon. Next week I'm doing 10 days meditation course.

I'm very serious about my hack school. My goal is to get some consulting work as a full stack developer right after my bootcamp, while I work on bridge project. Eventually, I will be able to launch and grow several financially successful companies.

That wouldn't be possible without your help, so thank you again.
