how to: Read Tolstoy

with Rosamund Bartlett

"If life could write, it would write like Tolstoy" wrote Isaac Babel. Universally regarded as the greatest writer of Russian fiction, Leo Tolstoy is the only author with two works regularly featuring in lists of the top ten novels of all time. This weekend course, led by Rosamund Bartlett, biographer and translator of Tolstoy, invites you to immerse yourself in both of them. We will explore the whole of Tolstoy's long career as a prose writer, but the focus will be on War and Peace and Anna Karenina, the novels which represent the summit of his creative achievement, and rank amongst the greatest monuments of world literature. Whether you participate in one or both days of the course is your choice.

how to: Understand your Mac or iPad

with Brad Clark

You do everything together. You share your most private moments, your most immediate thoughts, you cannot bear to be apart. You tell him – or maybe her – everything, but is it a one-way relationship? How well do you actually understand your Mac or iPad ? Do you know how capable he is, how many skills he actually has, and what a wealth of resources he is harbouring? Do you know how much more he could give if you only made the commitment to explore him in depth?

Give your Mac a treat on this bespoke course. But to ensure all your questions are answered, some of which may not be covered by the course outline below, feel free either to submit your own questions in advance by...

how to: Watch a Movie (A Multimedia Masterclass in the cinema of the new Ham Yard Hotel)

with David Thomson

We've been watching them for most of our lives. Or have we? Is there a difference between watching a movie and seeing a movie? How much do we really know about what is happening on the screen? What, for example, is the difference between a cut and a shot, and to properly absorb the experience should we be alone?

In this masterclass, our greatest film critic since Pauline Kael will give us a primer on what to think and how to talk about those movies that are models...
