Scan down several emails. The last has yet to get a response. But it is nonfiction and they seem trying to avoid my question about precise authorship.

Yes, of course. I didn't mean as a publishing imprimatur, but as a branding device--as Patterson has done with various of his fiction titles, using outside authors writing under his name. I just not aware of an instance in which this approach has been used in nonfiction. Any other examples that you can think of?

The book is being published by Little, Brown and Company (all of his adult titles are). Thanks!

Great. And clarify for me, Connolly is saying he's written the book under Patterson's imprimatur, which seems to be a new sort of brand extension. This is done in fiction, of course, but any other examples like this that you know of in nonfiction?

It's nonfiction – not his first, but probably his biggest foray into the genre.

So...fiction or non? Very curious--and helpful with regard to something [REDACTED] working on. Thanks.

Just checking one more thing...this will be nonfiction or fiction? And if it's nonfiction, is this Patterson's first nonfiction?

When do you think you'll have copies?

Hi Michael, so sorry for the delay – I was out of the office until this morning. We'll be publishing the book in August. Would love to set up an interview with you and Jim sometime before then – and [REDACTED] happy to share an early copy once we have those available.

Thanks for your interest!

Hi Michael,

Nicole forwarded me your inquiry re: James Patterson. There's no book on Epstein at this point.

Connolly has been working on an investigation for several years, and since he and Jim are both from Palm Beach they have met. Eventually they might see if there will be enough for a book, but it is too early to tell at this point.

That said, if something does materialize, I'll be sure to let you know. Let me know if you need anything else.

My best,
Sabrina
