Africa's Mobile-Sun Revolution

The transformative potential for mobile communications is upon us in every aspect of life. In the developing world where infrastructure of all types is at a premium, few question the potential for mobile, but many wonder whether it should be a priority. This post originally appeared in Re/code on April 29, 2015. Many years of visiting the developing world have taught me that, given the tools, people — including the very poor — will quickly and easily put them to uses that exceed even the well-intentioned ideas of the developed world. Poor people want to and can do everyt

Pablos Holman A friend of mine is looking to expand beyond her career as an actuary. She has an amazing head for numbers and is looking for some kind of Financial Analyst role that she could transition into. Anybody have ideas for her, especially in the Seattle area? I'm tempted to pretend I need a financial analyst so I can hire her myself.
