Partnering for Cures persists in mission to transform medicine

London Summit

Tom Frieden, director of the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention

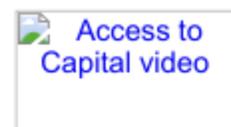

More than 1,000 leaders in medical research attended our fifth annual Partnering for Cures meeting in New York last week. The conference, led by the Institute's FasterCures center, featured expert panels – from big science to big data to big capital – that addressed some of the most critical challenges in science and health and 30 program presentations. In addition, attendees participated in more than 800 one-on-one partnering meetings intended to match researchers with potential funders. For panel videos, photos and more, visit partneringforcures.org.
