Why should they pay me if I have no skills since I've never done a photography school ? I think they will first offer me an internship but it could be a great opportunity. In Paris I was very lucky because I was working for Paolo Roversi this year who is also a great photographer, the job was not regular but it was paid. The problem with him is that his son committed suicide recently and his not working so much anymore. Working in the shop will give me 1000 pounds per month but it's still not enough for me to live and it's not what I want to do. What do you suggest

If they pay you it's easy

I'm super confused because this job has nothing to do with photography and what I want to do later. Isn't it better if I ask Mario Testino or Tim Walker if I can work for them for a year ? What if they say ok but they offer me an internship? Don't you think it's more clever to learn directly in my field of interest from great people ?

Thank you. It's still a mystery for me how I'm going to survive having to pay a rent ecc.. with 1000 pounds per month in London. Maybe it's possible, I don't know

I'll work there for a year if I have to but please promise me that when I finish the year you will help me and I can start a photography school.
