Wow.

Um. Wow.

Here is the email I sent him 2 minutes ago.

Jermaine,

You're jumping around solutions and ultimately making this much harder than it needs to be (and confusing me!).

1. You need a service to upload the photos to the web. Dropbox or iCloud, pick one.

    Dropbox is probably easier to use/smoother integration into Windows.

2. You need to share a link to the photo (or folder that contains the photos) and copy paste that link to Excel.

    Dropbox explains how to share a link on windows: https://www.dropbox.com/en/help/167

3. You need to send me that Excel document to test.

    With the file I can see what part is not working and tell you how to fix it.

Here is an example that should work on all platforms:

He'd sent me an iPhone photo of a monitor displaying an Excel document, saying iCloud links don't work. I'd asked him to send me the Excel document, instead he sent me the iCloud login credentials.

I have NO clue what he's intending to say to Jeffrey here.

Good evening boss,

Due to the inconsistent results (mac to mac or pc to mac) reported by different staff members with my dropbox solution for the punch list. I am recommending a suggestion from James Ce to create a web style interface. If this option sound valid to you I will consult with James for a website that will work for all platforms.
