Inaugural Summit Brings Together Public Health Leaders; CDC Director to Give Zika Update

Next week, hundreds of leaders will gather in Washington, D.C., for the first-ever Milken Institute Public Health Summit. Drawn from various industries, government, universities, research centers and the world of philanthropy, participants will advance public health efforts worldwide by fostering greater consensus among public and private institutions so they can deploy their resources more effectively. At the summit, more than 20 panels will explore a range of topics and CDC Director Tom Frieden will provide an update on the Zika virus emergency. Tied to the event, the Institute will release four new research reports delving into current issues in public health. "The summit continues work that the Institute has done for decades on the impact of advances in medical research and public health, both to improve lives and foster prosperity," says CEO Mike Klowden.

Innovative Finance to Address Nutrition in Southeast Asia

While malnutrition is a global issue, it has become a particularly severe public health problem across Southeast Asia. Our Financial Innovations Lab© report looks at ways that innovative finance can address the “dual burden” of malnutrition: the alarming rise in both undernutrition (nutrient-deficient and underweight) and overnutrition (overweight and obesity).

Framing the Issues: Developing Capital Markets in Rwanda

How should Rwanda develop its capital markets? This was the subject of a three-day roundtable discussion held in Rubavu, Rwanda, organized by the Rwanda Capital Market Authority and the Milken Institute's Center for Financial Markets, with support from FSD Africa. The latest Framing the Issues paper captures highlights.
