I don't see how I can avoid having a high profile at Minerva; they want to use me as a marketing tool.

I've been actively looking, but want to live on the East Coast -- which narrows things. The only two NYC jobs I found were not appealing. In fact, I've decided that I don't want to be a Provost somewhere, taking care of faculty. That's not what I do best. I like building things. I like solving interesting problems.

Man, did I ever screw up by taking my current job. There's no easy way out of this.

Not sure I understand what you mean about "use of funds." I've gone over budgets with him in detail. What would be in the "fundraising documents for the first round"? (I've talked to the V.C., and he says the same kind of thing Ben is always saying...)

Thanks,

Me too. I think it has almost no chance of succeeding. BUT it provides a way for me to get Robin out of California. Here's the plan: We will know in 18 months, max, whether Minerva will get to the next step. Ben has to raise 33M more by then. If he can't, then we have 8 mo of salary left. At that point I will contact the Harvard folks and ask whether they are looking for a House Master (they almost always are), and if they aren't, we will be "Resident Tutors" (who get free room and board for living in a House and hanging out with the students). If either option works (which is a very, very high Pr), we will move back to Cambridge. We will sell the house here and walk away with a good profit... and have enough to buy a small place in NYC. We will then spend 3 or 4 days a week in NYC and the rest in Cambridge.

That's my plan, which I think is very likely to work. Sound reasonable?

Thanks,

Hi JEE...

I gather that you talked to Ben Nelson on Saturday. He just sent me a note, saying that he would like to get together with the two of us when he and I will be in NYC. I would like to see you, in any case (maybe I could see you for an hour or so and then he could join us?). Are you around on Friday 22 February? As of now, my entire day is free .. when would be good?

Be well.
