Bruce Reinhart It's time for the President and Governors to use their clemency power. Too many people are serving sentences that are too long and that cost society too much money with no marginal increase in public safety. For example, the NY Times reports there are 5000 federal inmates serving sentences under the old crack laws. According to the Bureau of Prisons, it cost $26,000 in 2012 to house the average federal inmate. If the President commuted those 5000 sentences by 1 year each, it would save $130,000,000 in prison costs. The Executive Branch has the power to manage this problem. It needs the political courage
