Jeffrey,

Another thought occurred to me, to see if we can crack this open by the back door so to speak.

I note that the Times, Sunday Times and Guardian also made, albeit less prominent, references to the descriptive term "paedophile".

I would have a generally good relationship with the Legal Managers of both these publications (indeed the Sunday Times often retain me, if only to stop me suing them), and it may be that I could persuade one or both of them to publish a clarification, which we could in turn use as leverage in relation to the other publications. Let me know what you think.

In the meantime, I am conscious that you probably have very little information about me, having been introduced via Mike Sitrick. Accordingly, I am attaching a few sample press cuttings and further information can be obtained from our website ([REDACTED]). I am currently sitting on the Ministry of Justice Committee reviewing UK Libel Laws and was recently the subject of a BBC 1 documentary series, which I believe can still be accessed online if you are interested.

While I can't of course give any guarantees, I just wanted to ensure that you were aware of my background going forward.

Kind regards

Paul
