A women now working on it is

Andrea Wilson
Summit Equities LLC

New York, NY 10019

Please note below a trail of a previous bids – I started it (through Steve) at 5.9M and from there raised at 6.25M. He would agree at 6.65M but I did not accept it.

He was telling that he has another offer at that price and will accept it – it never happened.

This was 4 months ago.

He current ask is 6.85 – I am sure that right now you could get it for 6.5M if not less.

Yesterday I got an addition info – a friend of mine is a good friend with some guy Pitchy (spelling) that owned many building in Tribeca. It turns out that he was helping Evan and Summit Equities to acquire that building. He knew many details immediately.

He said that the building is old but in a good condition. There are some problems such as electrical is not up to the code. Also he mentioned that noise installation is not the best.

Also something with old air vents.

Also he said that there are many old people leaving forever in these rent control apartments (half of units in that building) that he does not see easily moving out.

As developers owns almost half of Units it is almost impossible to get a bank loan.

All of these reasons demanding that price per sq feet must be significantly lower than sounding comps.

He think that if I like apartment there is no major structural/other problems that would prevent.

Nevertheless, his major concern was slightly different – he is claiming that there are at least 8-10 development in that area that are coming on the market in a year or two – including some large block large building with hundredths of apartments. He thinks that although a market is right now very hot, that supply will shortly exceed demand and induce price correction. If developer would sell it at lower price, it might be still an opportunity.

$6,650,000 is my counter, that's $1,210 a foot aka STEAL. If I wait till the building lobby work is done in a few months I'll be raising the price to at least $7.25M that's only $1,300 a foot so they're basically getting a huge discount to going to contract now. Even at 7.25M it would still be the cheapest unit in Tribeca for this size. ■ educate them that they're making money just by buying this.

I have an investment I would roll this money into otherwise I wouldn't even sell this low.

Hi,

While the price per square foot is very low compared to the Tribeca aggregate market, the fact remains that it would be difficult to create more bedrooms, which most people looking at this size loft would need/want. It is great space, do not get me wrong, but a lot of the space can be utilized. However, my client still likes it and wishes to try to come to terms. Therefore, my client will increase his offer to $6,250,000. Let us know. Thanks!

Best,
Steve

Thank you for your offer I must decline at this EXTREMELY low proposed level. Since we are already the least expensive unit per square foot in the market at $1,250 and fully renovated /never lived in. Your clients would be getting a steal at existing pricing let alone less especially buying before the building work is done and values increase further. That said I will come down from my ask by $150,000 to $6.7M.
