Hi [REDACTED],

In [REDACTED] absence, I'd appreciate it if you might ask Jeffrey what's up with arranging a call or visit as outlined below.

Thank you,

Now that I'm back and on full throttle, I am looking at my calendar and wanted to let you know that I will be in New York next week (Tuesday-Friday). Funding the research remains a critical need as more requests for our training continue to arrive from widely diverse organizations. In a month, I am presenting an abstract to an international conference on disaster response at the University of Massachusetts; at the same time, we are developing more outreach with the head of FEMA and Homeland Security in Region 1 (New England) who wants to further apply our methodologies in the field. This makes the data we must collect ever more important and urgent.

I'd appreciate knowing when Jeffrey might be available for that follow-up call or a face-to-face to catch up on this and other more personal matters.

Thanks again for your help,

William

Hi [REDACTED],

I've returned from my seven week round-the-world odyssey and am basically caught up with Email, shoveling snow and jet lag. I had the opportunity to visit communities we've served in Asia, Indonesia, the Middle East and Sri Lanka as well as meet with people in London. Second Response is entering a critical time now with a pressing need to hire two new staff members to join our team, including a PhD clinical director to oversee the studies we will soon undertake to authenticate our protocols.

While I was away, my staff sent out an update with the attached Annual Report from 2013.

I'd appreciate setting up that follow-up phone call with Jeffrey whenever he can take a few moments. My schedule is quite flexible in the next week or two and I'd like to connect sooner than later. Please let me know what might work for him. I also plan to be in New York next week if he'd be open for a face-to-face and happens to be in town.

Many thanks, as always, for your help.

Warm regards,

William
