Do you know how unpleasant it is for me to ask you for anything. I wouldn't do it unless it was important and unavoidable.

I can't imagine being in your position and not doing everything in my power to make your life easier. The decision is yours, you could easily change my life and you choose not to. You'd rather just keep telling me it will end badly, feeling justified by some potential 'real life' lesson. That is disturbing. And it sounds too familiar. Your reaction to my plea for help with the visa was "I told you so. There is nothing to do. YOU ARE SCREWED." Not only were you wrong, but who says that?! The sentiment behind your advice is always 'you're screwed, give up.' Would you listen to that?

You must not realize the effect Your words have on people. I am doing my best to ignore the emotional battering but I too have a breaking point. Think about what you are saying. Do you actually want me to give up? I am asking you to please stop.

the famous paradox (everything i say is true , Im lying .) ... no matter what advice i give you , unless it comports with your misguided views , there is always a reason behind your choosing to ignore.
