Spooked

Ghost lines is an experimental dance film inspired by silent era clown movies, classic Vaudeville theater, and ghost towns. Following the performance of a "dusty ghost washed up from the Great Depression," it combines vintage film techniques (like frame-by-frame animation) with eccentric choreography to weave a haunting, dreamlike narrative.

Fly away home

Set in a mystical world of flying frogs and bearded whales on stilts, The Story of Flewn is an animated children's story with an unusual twist. Instead of turning pages, readers progress through the story by interacting directly with the characters to keep them well-fed and flying across sweeping, richly illustrated landscapes as they seek out a new ocean home.

A tale of one city

Three years ago, acclaimed filmmakers Heidi Ewing and Rachel Grady (Jesus Camp) set out to document the story of one of America's most iconic cities: Detroit. What they found became Detropia, the story of a city on the brink of collapse but determined to persevere. Originally premiered at Sundance, it provides an inspiring, cinematic portrait of a place striving to find its way into a radically different future.
