Below from Mariette re you are looking for a more poetic/literary writer...I will try to find sample writings from the below writers for you:

Ah, yes, I think I do know. I thought what he was mainly looking for is great reporting, for finding really interesting areas to explore and perhaps support.

But one of the most lyrical writers I know is George Musser, a former staff editor here. He's currently working on another book, and I don't know how busy he may be, but here are a couple of e-mails:

[REDACTED]

You can tell him I sent you if Jeffrey decides to reach out.

People (including me) also love the writing David Quammen, whose book on Ebola just came out. I am sure I can find his e-mail someplace if Jeffrey is interested.

In the life-sciences area, especially about evolution, Carl Zimmer is a pro, with many books to his credit. (I loved Parasite Rex from a few years ago.) He often writes on a freelance basis for the New York Times. He sometimes writes for us at Scientific American as well.

Well, they all do.

Anyway, I can find his e-mail without much trouble, also, if needed.

Hope those help.
