My dear Jeff,

it was really good to see you in such a good shape. I look better --but you certainly great.

Be serious for a minute:

Following the transaction that we closed with Vivendi (mentioned at lunch and of which I am attaching a description), another European client mandated my bank Crédit des Alpes to identify a possible acquisition in the pharmaceutical and/or medical appliances and/or medical devices

(practically almost anything that has to do with human health) industries. What our new client really wants to buy is Ebitda growth. Ideally 20+ % pa., which is much more likely to be found in emerging economies than around here. Good target size is Ebitda $ 200-400 with little debt (ie. a transaction value of $1.5-3bn).

In my experience going through the traditional channels of my competitors investment banks has never produced anything.

I thought that your ideas could be of great help to me and I'd welcome your advice.

I look forward to see you in New York either on the 12th or around the 21st of October. Please let me know if you'll be there.

Behave,

Fabrizio Cerina
