Dear Ghislaine and Sir Mark

Further to the email from Sir David, I am forwarding you the link to the ICorrect site:

www.icorrect.com

www.i-correct.com

To access the site you need to type:

Username: Sir David

Password: Tang

Can you please let me have your comments that I will include in the next round of revisions. Please do not expose this version yet as the final revisions will be due out in Version 2.0.

Regards

Jeremy

I can't tell you how rather excited I am about launching ICorrect. Finally, finally, after many meetings of total frustration, I think we have now got a website that I regard as good enough. In fact, I would say it's very good. It's so simple, yet it's astonishing how it has taken us so long to get to!

Anyway, Jeremy is going to send you a link, which I hope you might give me your opinions on.

Mark: as we will be having lunch next Monday, I wonder if we might meet at noon before lunch so that we can have a quick look at the whole business.

Ghislaine: are you coming to London at all? I am here quite a bit between now and the end of July. So it would be great to see you, and also to be able to go through the business with you. If you are not coming to London, we can talk on the telephone. Just let me know when.

But please after you have got into the ICorrect site, DO NOT SHOW IT TO ANYONE YET, as it is not yet final - although I will be showing it to my potential founding correcters. I hope both of you will soon also introduce it to others. In this respect, I am compiling a list of people I will be approaching as founding correcters who will not be required to pay (whereas all the other correcters will). Furthermore, they will be promised a cut of the purchase price if and when eventually the company is sold. This is to ensure their loyalty to ICorrect.

Jeremy will also be sending our 3-year business plan from which you will also see that, largely because of the income, almost unique to the internet business, we would only need a funding of US$1 million for year one for the launch. But of course you will have to indicate whether you want to subscribe or not. Jeremy will have all the details.

Let's hope we get together on this and have some fun.
