Hello again. I've just been told that because I've had my sales agent license in NY for 2yrs I qualify to sit for the brokers test here. I have one month until the brokers course starts and then one month of the course (which only requires 2 days of the wk). I would like to offer my help for little or no pay to an experienced broker in the area. Do you know of a broker I might want to contact by any chance?

best,

how are you? miss you a lot and hope all is well.

i'm making job changes again and was wondering if you have any thoughts on whether Miami or NY is a better place to be doing real estate right now? I am thinking about getting my license here, in south florida, and focusing on commercial properties. People around me are saying it's a good choice and that that growth and development is picking up, especially in the design district and in Winwood. Do you agree?

Hugs,
