not sure if it matters at this point, she has no immediate plans to come back to NY, so if she's up on the sight and the phone rings Lock would then have to get his thumb out of his ass....I think better to just leave it alone.....but thanks.

All is well, Marta shot for Gala on friday, Blank Magazine on Monday and a 10 page story for Zink Magazine on Tues (and possible cover). I don't think any model in Manhattan shot more editorials in such a short time span, all were booked from Europe. Just goes to show what kind of results a little bit of effort can produce. Joel did the right thing by standing by his booker, but the fact is that he didn't know what he was doing and Marta's career suffered greatly as a result. The question about whether or not she was past her prime was sort of a red herring, of course she is past her prime, she was past her prime when Next took her...Patrick Demarchiere has been past his prime for many years but that doesn't stop him from working. That's what dissappointed me about the whole situation, the way they shifted the focus onto Marta and made her seem like a washed up girl when in fact she's not, she's working very well, both on the ed and money side. Sorry to babble on about this but I was dissappointed at the way Neext handled the situation, telling her she looked great and that they were all behind her, then calling her in and telling her to go to Europe to work on her book and then removing her from the website the next day. I don't think she deserved that kind of treatment....and removing her from the site makes it much harder for me to place her w another NY agency because whoever I present her to will know she was dropped. They should have kept her on the site as a courtesy, just long enough for me to place her elsewhere. Anyway, she flew to Moscow last night and works in Milan on monday (9,000 Euros) then later in the week to Barcelona to do a Revlon job (20,000 Euros). Not sure when she will be back.

Julia is in the city, if you're in town let me know and I'll have her come see you :)

Hope you're well...

Ramsey
