I downloaded a trial version of some software that would report outgoing connections to the internet from the local machine. The setup is pretty straight forward and it configured itself for most installed applications on my MacBook. The trial version will run for 3 hours and flags different outgoing connections as they are taking place. For instance, anytime my Mac checks the time from [redacted] a little message window is displayed momentarily notifying me.

With the trial version, the application will shut itself down after 3 hours. The purchased version will not do this. Costs to purchase a single license is $30 and $110 for 5 machines.

[redacted], if you have some time today, and if this still sounds reasonable, perhaps we can coordinate installing this on [redacted] Macs.

Thanks,

WM
