on the calling, there is definitely individual variation in both tolerance and resources. this is why i like the zahavian notion which anchors honesty, and thus deception, in an evaluation of current condition. this of course does not take into account self-deception, which would radically alter the game dynamics.

thanks for passing on the alice/bob. keen to read.

chat did not make it.. thanks for your time and the attachments.. same issue there is no null state of the rhesus involved , like the game theory, does each monkey have the same tolerance for aggression.. more units of x to expend, therefore no calling preferred until a critical point. like the slot machine player with a full cup versus the old jewish women who has two nickels left don't know if my attempt to gmail chat made it through, but if not: thanks for having me, and for engaging in conversation from deception to helicopter interiors to russian babes to education and race to ethics to charitable giving to russian babes (oh yeah, i said that already).

am attaching a few older papers of mine re deception and deceptive signaling, related to our conversation. perhaps of interest, and if not, fortunately, no paper wasted!
