Lord Mandelson has flown to the holiday island of Corfu for a week's break, his spokesman said today, despite the furore caused by his stay there last summer.

The Business Secretary became embroiled in a political storm after spending time, along with shadow chancellor George Osborne, on the yacht of Russian oligarch Oleg Deripaska.

But the peer was said to be determined not to let that haunt his leisure time this year, making a last-minute dash on an Easyjet flight yesterday to stay with friends in the Greek hotspot.

"Peter is not going to allow what happened last year to put him off Corfu," his spokesman said.

"He is there for a week but this time without Russians, yachts or George Osborne."

Lord Mandelson, who will mind the Government shop next week while Prime Minister Gordon Brown continues his month-long break, is understood to have decided to take the break when it became clear there would be no imminent resolution to the question of carmaker Vauxhall's future.
