i want to be efficient about this and get it right.

do you want this to have the tone of:

- a) trying to sell martin's work (making it sound potentially more earth-shattering than it may be)
- b) a good balanced representation that includes the opposition's critique
- c) strictly a summary of the Nature paper in layperson's terms
- d) some mixture of the above...(please specify)

i have had some more thoughts along the lines of "If this works...." that I'd like to run by you. (i am not sure i see martin's work fitting into that kind of world-changing science that the UN might want to fund either so want to know if this article is supposed to have that flavor as well).

okay, let me know your thoughts. if it's easier i could come up their for tea and we could have some time to chat one-on-one. (i don't think i've ever spoken to you without anyone else around, come to think of it).

i'll probably have this done on monday due to commitments i thought i would be able to shirk but can't (a break fast that follows, um, not fasting) compounded by the search for a shoebox to live in...
