Financial improprieties or something they should be very sensitive to being brought public. I'm surprised. I think the point is to not lie down for them don't you agree? Regardless of the outcome. As long as it doesn't cost anyone else money but them.

I can certainly understand that argument. As long of course as waiting that long does not preclude any action at that time.

Moreover I see nothing wrong with the other donors asking for an audit if they get dicked around. I appreciate the need for you to keep a low profile right now and I want to do everything I can to protect that. But the other donors should make a lot of noise. And right now the university should be terrified of any kind of legal proceeding. Certainly any financial improprieties would be disastrous. But more than that Every university in the country almost is being hit with lawsuits on the basis of their withholding rates and due process. If this were to blow up again for Asu at this time, they would look pretty bad.
