

CONFIDENTIAL

CONFIDENTIAL EDITOR BRIAN NIEMIETZ IS AWAY UNTIL JUL.10.

PHOTO OF THE DAY

FILMMAGIC

HIL AND BILL B'WAY HITS

Being that she's not the leader of the free world, Hillary Clinton has some free time on her hands and that means catching up on Broadway shows. Hillary and hubby Bill (both above) attended a Sunday performance of the Tony-winning play "Oslo," a three-hour drama about the Oslo peace accords between the Israelis and Palestinians. The couple received a standing ovation from the giddy crowd and calls of, "We love you, Hillary," echoed through the theater. Bill actually makes an appearance in the show, thanks to being pictured in footage of the Oslo accords' signing in the White House Rose Garden. The audience went nuts when the clip played.

GETTY

EARLY B'DAY WITH HART

Kevin Hart turns 38 this Thursday, but that hasn't stopped the comedian (above left) from celebrating a little early. The "Get Hard" star brought some pals Sunday night to the LIV club in Miami, where he partied alongside DJ Irie and had the crowds cheering when he introduced hip-hop artists Nelly and T.I., who gave a surprise performance together onstage. Rapper Lil Wayne showed up in the wee hours of Monday morning and performed for a full hour.

'LOOKING' STAR IS IN AN 'ATYPICAL' ROLE

Raul Castillo, who played the heart-tugging haircutter in HBO's "Looking," told the Daily News that he still sees his ex-castmates Jonathan Groff and Murray Bartlett "all the time. Just the other night." Up next for Castillo is a role in the autism-themed Netflix show "Atypical," which debuts next month. "I can't say too much. It's very different for me from 'Looking.'"

BODY TALK FROM 'GREEK GODDESS'

Brazilian bombshell Alessandra Ambrosio (right and below left) soaked up the sun in Mykonos, Greece. The Victoria's Secret stunner, 36, was also seen smooching her fiancé, Jamie Mazur, with whom she shares two children, daughter Anja, 8, and son, Noah, 5. Ambrosio admitted to The Edit last year that a woman's body changes after having children. "Your body will never go back to exactly what it was before pregnancy, whatever people tell you. It can't," she said. But the supermodel did say she thinks her body is "better now than before I had kids."

BACKGRID

Celebrities' Fourth-night memories

REX/SHUTTERSTOCK

IN HONOR OF Independence Day, we've asked celebrities about their favorite — or most explosive — Fourth of July memories.

Not surprisingly, a lot of them involved fireworks. "Saturday Night Live" alum Andy Samberg (photo inset) had a mishap with pyrotechnics as an adolescent.

"I tried to throw a firecracker and it went off right next to my ear," he tells Confidential. "I was probably in sixth grade. My ear rang for about a week and I was worried that I given myself permanent hearing loss. It got better and I was very relieved."

Actress Amy Poehler says her most memorable Fourth of July didn't happen in America. "I was in a college exchange program and I spent July 4 in Dublin, Ireland, and very drunkenly had to explain what we were celebrating and did a very bad job," she laughs.

"Entourage" star Debi Mazar's favorite Fourth was "flying out to my home in Tuscany and watching the fireworks below me. That was fierce, like, 'Bye bitches.' I got to Heart and soul. Olivia Palermo struck a heartfelt pose at the Schiaparelli Couture Show in Paris.

AP

see the fireworks from above with my kids." Trisha Yearwood, who married fellow country star Garth Brooks in 2005, says that's when the holiday really became a big deal for her. "When I moved to Oklahoma to be with Garth, the Fourth of July became a big thing," she explained. "My family would come and everybody in Oklahoma does fireworks. We didn't really do that growing up in Georgia. You could see fireworks in every surrounding town, so that was pretty awesome."

Naturally, British singer Ed Sheeran didn't grow up celebrating Independence Day, but he spent the last three of them at pal Taylor Swift's, alongside her squad, and says, "They've all been great."

Colombia native John Leguizamo, who grew up in Queens, fondly remembers America's bicentennial bash in 1976. "That was amazing, Man," he says. "You saw all New Yorkers come from every part of every neighborhood to be together in Central Park as one. That was unity and inclusiveness, it was a beautiful time — something we need in America desperately right now."

Tony winner Sutton Foster was in Washington performing "Les Misérables" one year and remembers going to the White House to watch the fireworks.

"I got to shake President Clinton's hand and I was eating an ice cream pop and my hands were covered with chocolate and I was like, 'Hello, Mr. President!' It was incredible. It was such a great moment."

THE WEDDING SINGER

A generic wedding singer doesn't cut it when the offspring of two of Russia's richest families get hitched. Lady Gaga (bottom) performed at the very splashy wedding of Lolita Osmanova (whose dad, Eldar, is an energy tycoon) and Gaspar Avdolyan (whose father is an internet businessman), which is rumored to have cost $10 million. The shindig took place over the weekend at the Dolby Theatre in L.A. — the home of the Oscars — and featured rows of classical violinists, thousands of candles and over-the-top floral arrangements. Also performing at the lavish wedding was Jason Derulo, who performed his hits.

GETTY

Tipline: 212-210-1616 Twitter: @NYDNgossip E-mail: