Dear Mr. Epstein,

I've attempted to call you, but our researcher at The Washington Post is unaware if the cell phone number listed for you is a current and accurate number. I recently saw your address printed in the New York Post, so I figured I would try to send you a letter by mail.

I'm one of The Washington Post reporters who broke the story of sexual harassment by Charlie Rose. During the reporting process, your name was mentioned to me by two of the women who were harassed by Mr. Rose. I must protect their confidentiality and the specific details of what they shared, but I was left with the general impression that at one point you had a strong friendship with Mr. Rose, and that perhaps that relationship had deteriorated because of his behavior toward the women working for him.

I've largely moved on from the Charlie Rose story, but I do have a few lingering questions on my mind concerning your connection to Mr. Rose.

I am not sure that speaking to you will lead to a story or would necessarily be productive for either of us, but my continuing curiosity about the topic has driven me to reach out to you. I am hopeful that we could at least have a phone conversation, even if it is on background or off the record. My cell number is 202-815-9810. I am on Signal and WhatsApp if you prefer to reach out through an encrypted messaging app.

Thank you for your consideration, and I hope to hear from you soon.

Sincerely,
