The individual ( person ) is also an experience
The body/mind and universe simultaneously co arise and co subside as an intermittent constantly changing stream of sensations images feelings and thoughts in formless being / experiences as innumerable knowers ,modes of knowing , and objects known .

Dear Deepak,

The word "experience" implies an individual or subject experiencing and something else which is being "experienced". So from evidence there is at least more than one consciousness in existence, I believe your claim has always been that there exists only "one consciousness", and nothing else exists at all. Obviously something else exists, or there would be no such thing as experience, and we are clearly experiencing something at every second. Consciousness is experience, and therefore consciousness implies multiplicity.
